In 1896, two anti-colonial wars took place in Africa during the European scramble for African colonies that are the subject of this historical novel: the Ethiopian successful defense of their country with the defeat of the Italians at Adwa and the uprising by the Ndebele and Shona against white settlers in Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe). In Africa, the scramble for African colonies was a time of great upheaval aggravated by widespread disease, famine and mass starvation. In America, 1896 was a sobering year for black men and women fighting to maintain their freedom against considerable odds in the wake of the Civil War. African Americans were locked in a fierce, ongoing struggle with former Confederates who had unleashed a murderous campaign against them that would eventually restore white supremacy to the south. This novel takes us back to these turbulent times and looks at these events through the eyes of some of the prominent figures of the day who played a central role in them, thereby shedding some light on this very dark period in the history of African people.
