Creation's Heartbeat aims to - interest and provoke students of the Bible and the Talmud, and open up fresh debate - challenge those who are interested in deep codes and puzzles - illustrate the fruitfulness of adopting Hebraic approaches to understanding the Bible. Creation's Heartbeat studies the first four words of Genesis using traditional techniques. The enquiry adheres to strict principles and is tightly focused, with a battery of tests applied to its findings. Part Two looks at each word and its contents, alternative ways of reading the words in combination, and at the rhythm of letters. Step by step, the pieces of the puzzle are assembled. A recurring pattern and twin themes emerge which point to a profound resolution. Part Three sets out the Bible's entry code. This helps unlock our understanding of creation's moral and physical foundation. The design is hidden for our sake. Its completion awaits our decision. In its journey, the enquiry: • reveals an eternal sign • decodes the first name of God in the Bible • identifies the first adjective describing the nature of God • unpacks the title of the first book in the Torah • shows hidden names of God • casts fresh light on key Biblical texts.
