Money: Cash out 1 Million in 24 months using Your Credit!

You can have $1,000,000.00 sitting in your bank account, or piled up on your bed, in the next 24 months.
(Read that sentence again)

You can have $1,000,000.00 sitting in your bank account, or piled up on your bed, in the next 24 months.

Let's imagine for a moment that your credit is terrible. You're working some 9-to-5 job (maybe) and every day you sit on the freeway and watch Ferrari's drive-by, reminding you of the futility of your job. We are going to give you, in the following pages, a lot of sound advice about building your credit. We are also going to let you in on a little system that some of us have used to become millionaires, all by using our own credit and nobody else's money.

We are not advising that you follow this system, this is for informational purposes only. But theoretically, if one wanted to, they could build their credit so high that they could literally cash out 1 million or more dollars within the next 24 months. So ask yourself...

Do you want to be a millionaire?

Would like to be a millionaire in the next 24 months?

What is the value of having good credit if you're living paycheck-to-paycheck?

Can you survive seven years with bad credit, while having a million dollars in cash in the bank?

If I was to cash out $1 million (which would max out and potentially destroy your credit) would that be enough to exist comfortably?

These are just some of the questions that a person would have to ask him or herself before engaging in our system. But you will learn valuable lessons along the way about your credit, and hopefully you'll employ some of the credit protection strategies we will suggest. It would be amoral and unethical for us to suggest to you a strategy of willfully and intentionally building up your credit only to ring the register and cash out $1 million with no intention of repayment.

However, depending on how that million dollars could change your life in terms of investments, real estate, building projects, new business ventures, etc., it's certainly an interesting subject to contemplate. It's true, $1 million ain't what it used to be. But it's still a million dollars.

Even if your intention is simply to do this, put a million dollars in your bank account, and then pay back all of your lenders, that's quite an accomplishment. In the end, you'll have to decide how far you're willing to take this system.

Like we said in the beginning . . . this is for INFORMATIONAL PURPOSES only. DO NOT WILLFULLY attempt to game the system, build up your credit, and then cash out unless you want massive headaches with creditors and collectors (all of whom you could pay off at pennies on the dollar if you so chose).

So, without further redo, let's begin.

You should definitely read chapter 9 in depth so you have a full understanding of what the credit agencies can actually do, and their limitations.

You will learn:

How to fix your credit

What is your credit score?

What are the three bureaus?

Researching your credit score/report

The federal laws that you need to know

How to receive a free credit report?

The different types of contracts and agreements you can enter into

Disputing derogatory information with the bureaus

How to improve your credit

Getting new lines of credit

What are collections agencies?

How to obtain a secured credit card

Only charge what you can afford to pay in full each month

Pay on time every month

Avoid applying for numerous accounts if your credit is dodgy or nonexistent

Check your progress by checking your credit report and score

Understanding Credit utilization
