Love, Life, and Cats Philip Wik

A Letter to My Children Beloved Children, I started writing this book more than a decade ago, when you were ten and eight. And so I want to reach across the years and the miles to chat with you, and maybe even to guide you with what I've learned while I'm still able to write. You may find that these declarations and meditations may not work for you. But no matter what, I know you'll find your own path and that path will be good. When I first published these essays on my website more than a decade ago, someone responded: "Wow dude, I'm reading your manifesto here and it's pretty heavy stuff. Well done! I want to add to these two words: Brilliant & Beautiful." He then added: "I wish my father had spared the time to impart the bulk of his knowledge on to me like this." This is a book of things that challenge us and that bring pleasure to us as we navigate the seasons of our life. So let's go the porch and sip some lemonade and talk about love, life and death, cats, and more. The sun is just starting to set behind the purpling mountains and the sky is streaked in neon, crimson, and gold. Before long, it will be dark and stars will spangle the Arizona sky, but still we'll talk maybe even sometimes we'll squabble. But that's OK, because you're my guys and I'll always love you. Your Dad
