The Intimate Cottage in Vermont: A Love Story Hector LeBlanc

An English professor at U.C.L.A. who wishes to remain anonymous, wrote "You have written a surprisingly good novel. It is an entirely different category than one expects from a romance novel. And from a distinctively feminine point of view. That is a compliment." A love story for modern times. Newly retired Commander John Novack, United States Navy, begins a new career as a nuclear specialist consultant from Massena, New York. In the early '90s he is drawn into the use of the Internet as a business necessity. He meets Marilyn Wood, a mother seeking information about a daughter's eye problem. Marilyn, a literary editor from Lancaster, Pennsylvania, working almost exclusively on the Internet, becomes fascinated by this naval officer. After a year or more of correspondence, she reluctantly agrees to meet him for an innocent dinner engagement. Is it wrong for them to tempt fate in this way? What ensues is a tale of true love and passion. Nevertheless, they both remain devoted to their families and display unselfish respect for each other. Their lives become intimately intertwined during three encounters at a cottage near Rutland, Vermont. Find out if they recognize their true, never-before-known soul mate when they meet!
