It has come to an end. Man has finally done it. The Overworld as we know it is gone. Gone is the life that once dwelled it, civilization has crumbled, and technological advancement was stumped back to the ground sending the whole world in a state of primordial life. There is little known information on how many of us humans survived, but whatever the number may be, or wherever they are holed up right now, one thing is for sure... All of them are dying. All of us are dying.

My name is RichKid421, I was born in a rather advance village named TechnoPark. I used to own a Red Stone mining facility that provided our village with technological advancements that people in the Overworld could only dream of. We had lights that turned on and off automatically, the kind that doesn't use any form of fuel, just Red Stone energy. We had a rail way system that could take you anywhere you wanted within the city. We had big sky scrapers and research facilities that did not only aim to improve the city, but the very lives of the people living within it. But just like any civilization before us, it was our endeavor for progress and insatiable thirst for advancement that caused our downfall. Unfortunately, we took the world down with us.
